Understanding India’s Strategic Culture through Operation Sindoor: Lessons from Mahabharata and Maratha Legacy

In today’s article, we delve into a crucial and timely topic—Operation Sindoor, a recent military development that's been making headlines across Indian news platforms. This discussion is especially important for those preparing for competitive exams, as it touches upon a key concept: Strategic Culture.

What is Strategic Culture?

To understand Strategic Culture in simple terms, think about how an individual's behavior is shaped by their family, religion, traditions, and past experiences. Similarly, a nation's behavior—especially regarding war, peace, and security—is influenced by its historical experiences, belief systems, and geographical realities.

Strategic culture determines how a country perceives and responds to:

1. War
2. Peace
3. Security

India’s strategic responses, especially in matters of national defense and diplomacy, are deeply influenced by its historical epics, philosophies, and cultural ethos. One such major influence is the Mahabharata.

Mahabharata and India's Strategic Thinking

The Mahabharata continues to shape India’s strategic mindset. Here are three major lessons derived from the epic and their application in modern India’s military strategy, especially Operation Sindoor:

1. War Must Be Fought for Dharma (Justice and Righteousness)

In the Mahabharata, the war of Kurukshetra was fought only after all other options had failed. This principle echoes in India's relationship with Pakistan. Despite multiple peace initiatives and diplomatic efforts, Pakistan has continued to support terrorism, betraying the essence of dharma.

Operation Sindoor was not an impulsive action but a response rooted in justice. It was a retaliation, not provocation.

2. Preparedness is Key

Krishna taught Arjuna that preparation is essential before engaging in battle. Similarly, after the incident in Pahalgam, India didn't immediately strike back. Instead, it followed a calculated approach:

- Pausing the Indus Water Treaty
- Expelling Pakistani defense personnel
- Strategic and diplomatic isolation

Only after full preparedness, India launched Operation Sindoor—a precise, intelligence-backed response designed to avoid escalation.

3. Psychological Warfare and Intelligence are Crucial

Mahabharata's narrative also emphasizes the role of intelligence gathering through characters like Sanjay, who provided real-time battlefield updates. Drawing from this, Operation Sindoor was a surgical strike based on precise intelligence and executed in a non-escalatory manner. It was inspired by the Mahabharata's Chakravyuh strategy—highly tactical and focused.

The Maratha Legacy: Self-Reliance and Indigenous Warfare

Operation Sindoor also reflects inspiration from the Maratha Empire, particularly Chhatrapati Shivaji Maharaj. While contemporaries like Tipu Sultan and Maharaja Ranjit Singh relied on European officers to modernize their armies, Shivaji focused on indigenous capabilities.

This legacy of self-reliance is visible in today's Indian defense initiatives:

DRDO-developed Akash Missile System

Medium-range surface-to-air systems capable of neutralizing threats up to 45 km away

Shivaji's philosophy of guerrilla warfare and homegrown defense continues to guide India's military planning.

Conclusion

Operation Sindoor is more than a military strike—it is a reflection of India's strategic culture. Rooted in the values of justice (dharma), preparedness, and self-reliance, the operation embodies the teachings of the Mahabharata and the Maratha legacy. For students and aspirants, understanding these connections is essential not just for exams but for appreciating how India's past continues to shape its future.[i]

---

[i] This is used only for education and research Purpose the copyright lies to it's original owner Pavneet Singh and/or any.

Text is transripted and translated with AI & edited

Original Source: Youtube